Flight 592's data recorder found

MIAMI — With a sharpshooter to protect them from alligators and poisonous snakes, recovery workers Monday recovered the flight data recorder from ValuJet Flight 592, along with disintegrated plane parts and human remains no bigger than a Workers brought in heavy equipment, and teams of divers walked side by side searching the murky swamp inch by inch. Navy salvage specialists used sonar to look for the plane's black box recorders.

The data recorder, which could yield clues to the cause of the crash, was being taken to National Transportation Safety Board headquarters in Washington for analysis. NTSB spokesman Mike Benson said he did not know the condition of the recorder.

By midday seven body bags of remains had been removed.

"I don't hold any hope we'll find any recoverable large parts of people," said retired Dade County Medical Examiner Joseph Davis, who is taking part in the investiga-

Victims' relatives grew restive.

"They should have had a crane or a radar or something. They've got that kind of equipment," said Raquel Perry, daughter-in-law of crash victim Wilhemina Perry of Miami. "By the time they get out there with those alligators and stuff, she'll be all ate up.'

The Atlanta-bound DC-9 crashed Saturday shortly after takeoff from Miami's airport with 104 passengers and five crew members. The crew radioed urgently about smoke in the cockpit and cabin before the tower lost contact.

Investigators said th the wreckage would be slow because of the difficult conditions: heat in the mid-80s, swarms of mosquitoes and horseflies, razor-sharp sawgrass and water 6 inches to 5 feet deep over mud that some locals estimate is 30 to 40 feet deep.

"This is tough stuff out there," NTSB Vice Chairman Robert Francis said. • CBS News reported that the Federal Aviation Administration was to be investigated as part of an overall probe being conducted in the wake of the crash by the Department of Transportation. CBS said the DOT was looking into the possibility the FAA knew Valujet was headed for trouble before the crash. The network said the FAA declined to comment on the probe.

ValuJet Airlines stock dropped sharply Monday, the first day of trading since the crash and also the first day of intensified federal scrutiny of the Atlanta-based carrier. It closed on the Nasdaq Stock Market down $4.18 3/4 a share at $13.68 3/4.

At the scene Monday, about 30 divers, in rubberized suits to protect them from skin-irritating jet fuel, walked through the water in shifts that lasted only 15 to 20 minutes because of the grueling conditions. A marksman accompanied them to watch for alligators and water moc-

Davis cautioned that it could take up to a week to identify victims and that some might never be identified. A forensic anthropologist and a forensic dentist will help the medical examiner's office.

Davis said it was possible some of the passengers were conscious when the plane nose-dived into the Everglades about 15 miles from the airport. But the husband of pilot Candalyn Kubeck said he thought the crew was unconscious.

"They passed out from the smoke based on that eyewitness report that the angle never varied. If that's correct, they were obviously incapacitated," said Roger Kubeck, a pilot at America West Airlines.

Mrs. Kubeck, 35, was believed to be the first female captain of a commercial jet to be killed in a U.S.

DALLAS — Candalyn Kubeck, the pilot of doomed ValuJet Flight 592, was a crew "den mother" and avid flier whose grandfather flew biplanes in the 1920s, her husband said today.

Mrs. Kubeck, believed to be the first woman commercial-jetliner captain killed in a U.S. crash, was among 109 people killed Saturday when her ValuJet plane nose dived into the Florida Everglades.

"Whatever happened on this deal, it was something she did not know about," Kubeck said. He said he thinks the crew was unconscious by the time the jetliner plunged into the swamp. "I think they passed out from the smoke, based on that eyewitness report that the angle never varied. If that's correct, they were obviously incapacitated," Kubeck said.

In Florida, Greg Feith of National Transportation Safety Board said there was no way to speculate about whether the pilots were unconscious. Feith said that after a crew member acknowledged receiving information on the closest airport, the Miami tower tried twice to contact the plane but received no response.

Pam Mitchell of the International Society of Women Airline Pilots said she believes it was the first U.S. commercial crash with a female captain. At least one woman co-pilot died - in March 3, 1991, when a United Airlines jetliner crashed near Colorado Springs, Colo., killing 25 people — but she wasn't a captain.

Kubeck said he and his wife talked about dying in a plane crash in April when 7-year-old Jessica Dubroff was killed while trying to become the youngest pilot to fly cross-country.

Study used in clubs' bill taken out of context

SALT LAKE CITY — A study contained in legislative intent language accompanying a bill aimed at banning gay clubs for students was taken out of context, according to its author.

"It's trash," Gary Remafedi, a professor of pediatrics at the University of Minnesota told The Salt Lake Tribune in a copyright story published Sunday. "It's a brilliant example of taking scientific information out of context and misusing it for political purposes."

In a commencement speech Friday at Pennsylvania State University, Clinton urged every middle school and high school to do like Perlyn and make public service part of the curriculum.

He also urged colleges to use federal funds to orient college work and study toward community service. He said the government would match community grants — up to $500 — to reward high school students who do significant work for their communities.

Making it mandatory might result in more students becoming lifelong community servants, said Staff attorney Scott G. Bullock.

East coast college to imitate

SALT LAKE CITY — Like the children of so many LDS families, Roger Barrus' daughter looked forward to moving from her hometown in Virginia to attend a church-owned school in the West.

Associated Press

She had the grades and her test scores were good, plus her parents liked the idea of a school that promoted strong values and religious princi-

But because of rigorous enrollment standards and a mix up with her transcripts, she was denied entry to Brigham Young University in Provo and Ricks College in Rexburg, Idaho.

"She was devastated," Barrus said. "It's really hard, you know, when kids think there are no other alternatives than those two schools out there."

So Barrus came up with a third

He and a group of businessmen and educators, all members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, acquired Southern Virginia College a two-year private women's college - that they plan to turn into a fouryear, coed school with a BYU-like honor code and an emphasis on moral and spiritual development.

It's a big change for the 130-yearold college nestled at the edge of a forest in Buena Vista, Va., a school known for the quality of its writing and equestrian programs.

The new managers, who take over Monday, stress that the college will continue to be nonsectarian and nonprofit. But they expect many of the students will be members of the LDS church. "We're counting on it," said Barrus, a political science professor at Virginia's Hampden-Sydney College, who will be the new provost and academic dean at Southern Virginia. "But it's not just LDS kids who want to come to a campus environment that supports religious principles."

Toby Anderson, a church-employed social worker and the school's new dean of students, said the goal is to enroll 400 students this fall. He has already received nearly 300 requests for application, mostly from Virginia-area church members.

"I am certain that prayers have been offered up for multiple decades that the church would become part of bringing higher education to the East Coast," he said. "This is a nonsectarian school, but we certainly will have a very large LDS influence.

Barrus' mind when its current president, John Ripley, told him Southern Virginia was closing because it had lost its accreditation due to long-term debt of $4.5 million.

Barrus then called his stake president, Glade Knight, "who happens to be a property management-development guy," and asked him if he would like to buy a college.

"I told him, 'It's got horses.' He's a real horse nut so he said, 'Buy it," Barrus said.

Knight, who will be chairman of the college's board of trustees, had been trying to find an eastern college friendly towards LDS students.

The new managers will assume the school's debt, but do not plan to raise the $11,500 yearly tuition or the $6,000 for fees, room and board. Instead, they hope to raise $50 million over five years from corporate sponsors and individuals.

Ripley, a member of the Catholic Church, and special programs director Amy Burgess said the takeover upset a few faculty, staff and students at the school, known before 1992 as Southern Seminary.

"To me it was a perfect fit," said Ripley, who hopes to continue at the college in another capacity. For some students, the stri planned by the new LDS mail are too severe. Freshman Grachus of Green County, Va some students have left beca incoming honor and dress code

The dress code specifies that and skirts be knee-length are mustaches and beards be trimmed. Earrings for men a allowed.

Men and women will be hou separate dorms, and students required to give two hours of co nity service a week.

"We would like our gradua" possess a core of character and to live lives that are imbueld integrity," said the college's new ident, David Ferrel, a senior and the Wirthlin Group, a public co research firm.

Court rules on alcohol ads

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, in a decision that might hamper President Clinton's effort to limit cigarette advertising, struck down Rhode Island's ban on ads that list or refer to liquor prices Monday.

A unanimous court said the ban, aimed at promoting sobriety, violates free speech rights. The ruling also gave other commercial speech greater protection against government regulation.

The full impact of the ruling, spelled out in four separate opinions, will not likely be known until lower courts begin to interpret it.

But the ruling marked the high court's strongest statement against regulating commercial speech since a landmark 1975 decision that extended the First Amendment's free speech guarantee to advertising.

Monday's decision appeared to move commercial speech a step closer to being as protected against government regulation as political or artistic expression.

Justice John Paul Stevens wrote in Monday's main opinion that blanket bans, such as Rhode Island's prohibition against liquor ads, "rarely survive constitutional review." He rejected the state's argument that ads for "vice" products such as liquor should be subjected to increased regulation.

Just labeling some activity as a vice isn't enough to justify clamping down on accurate advertising if that activity itself remains legal, Stevens said.

Clinton and the federal Food and Drug Administration have proposed rules, opposed by the tobacco industry and others, that would forbid cigarette brand advertising at sports events and on T-shirts and other goods.

The proposed rules would ban tobacco billboards within 1,000 feet of schools and playgrounds and limit the use of pictures and colors in cigarette ads.

"I think the court's ruling gives more ammunition to those who inevitably are going to challenge any restrictions on cigarette advertising," said Scott Bullock, an Institute of Justice lawyer who had opposed the Rhode Island ban.

"It's not a closed case but the ruling appears to help their arguments," he said.

FDA spokesman Jim O'Hara said the proposed rules do not amount to a blanket ban on cigarette advertising but instead are aimed at reducing tobacco products' appeal to minors, for whom smoking is illegal.

Rhode Island law allows advertising for alcoholic beverages but since 1956 has required publishers and broadcasters to exclude any mention of prices, or even the word "sale."

In a key part of Monday's ruling, Stevens wrote:

"When a state entirely prohibits the dissemination of truthful, non-misleading commercial messages for reasons unrelated to the preservation of a fair bargaining process, there is far less reason to depart from the rigorous review that the First Amendment generally demands."

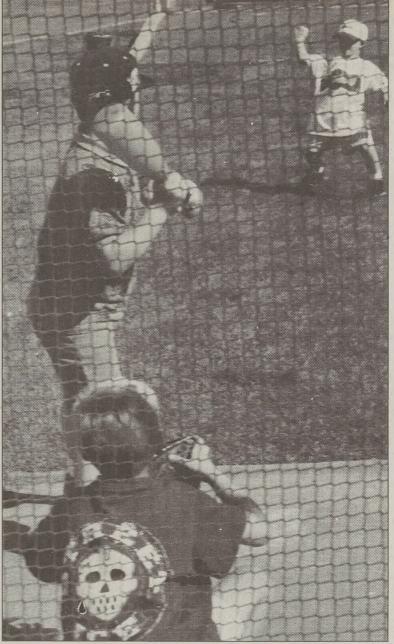

He was joined in that part of his opinion by Justices Anthony M. Kennedy, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Clarence Thomas.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, in a concurring opinion for herself, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices David H. Souter and Stephen G. Breyer, also agreed that the Rhode Island law must fall. But they favored a more narrowly focused ruling.

Justice Antonin Scalia voted to strike down the law for yet other reasons.

Thomas would have gone farther in protecting commercial speech than any other member of the court.

"All attempts to dissuade legal choices by citizens by keeping them ignorant are impermissible," he wrote.

Diarrhea is often a sign of cholera, a highly contagious disease that can be fatal if left untreated.

The refugees were taken in small batches off the Bulk Challenge Monday and onto nearby barges for medical attention. They were then put back on the ship, which was expected to set sail again Tuesday for either Nigeria or Liberia.

On Sunday the Bulk Challenge had tried to dock at Takoradi, but Ghanaian authorities blocked it with large floating cranes. Naval sources said gunshots were heard on the freighter and they feared Liberian faction fighters were on board.

They later let the Bulk Challenge anchor for several hours to refuel and then forced it to embark on the three-day journey to Lagos, Nigeria.

However, its generator broke down overnight and the ship was allowed to return to Takoradi on Monday morning

The United Nations pleaded Monday with West African leaders to offer refuge to the Liberians.

"Unless the door is opened to them, a lot of people, many of them women and children, may die," said U.N. High Commissioner Sadako Ogata.

But like Ivory Coast, which turned away the Bulk Challenge earlier in the week, Ghana is fed up with harboring tens of thousands of Liberians who have fled the 6 1/2-year civil war. Ivory Coast has already been flooded with 350,000 Liberians who have fled across the border since Charles Taylor launched the war six years ago.

Elder F. Enzio Busche of the First Quorum of the Seventy will speak at a BYU Devotional today at 11 a.m. in the de Jong Concert Hall in the Harris Fine Arts Center.

Elder Busche was sustained as a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy on Oct. 1, 1977. He served as a mission president in the Germany Munich Mission and as the president of the Frankfurt Temple.

He now serves as second counselor in the North America Southwest Area and as an assistant executive director of the Temple Department.

Elder Busche was drafted at age 14 into the German army and lived in an American prison camp at the end of World War II.

After his education, he spent 22 years in the printing industry as the chief executive officer and co-owner of the Busche Company, one of the largest printing and publishing companies in Germany.

Elder Busche married Jutta Baum in 1955. They were introduced to the gospel in 1956. Together they have served in various church callings for 40 years. Elder and Sister Busche are the parents of four children and have

To acknowledge the history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in California, a new book chronicling activities of California saints from the past 150 years has been published by the BYU Religious Studies Center.

"California Saints: a 150-Year Legacy in the Golden State" was written by Richard O. Cowan, professor and chair of the Department of Church History and Doctrine at BYU, and William E. Homer, a San Jose real estate agent and educator who is a member of the LDS Public Affairs Council in the San Francisco Bay

Although the book itself has only been in process for the last three years, Homer said the idea and manuscript of "California Saints" has taken more than 10 years to develop.

Publication of "California Saints" was planned to coincide with the celebration of the sesquicentennial of church activity in California, said Robert Millet, dean of Religious Education and director of the Religious Studies Center. Saints arrived in California as early as 1846. Stories of these saints and others who followed are compiled into the 400

While some books published by the Religious Studies Center are for factual reference, this book is designed to reach a broader audience, including many who are interested in the historical progression of the church, said Kent Jackson, publications director of the Religious Studies Center.

"It's been exciting as we've worked together to see some of these lessknown stories of the saints," Cowan said. Homer and Cowan have researched and documented stories from several sources, including personal diaries and eyewitness reports. Homer worked with the different ideas for a manuscript from 1985 to 1992 before he was joined by Cowan. Specific stories in "California Saints" include detailed accounts of the Mormon Battalion, the settling of San Francisco, and the challenges faced by saints from the 19th century through the Depression years and World War II.

President Howard W. Hunter was used as thread throughout the book, Jackson said. "He, like so many members of the church, moved to California as a young person to take advantage of California's new opportunities," Jackson said. "He was typical to the active California Mormon who held leadership positions and helped build churches and temples."

BYU hosted the Young Craftsman's Fair, which featured displays from over 600 junior high and high school students, Monday in the ELWC Garden Court.

The Young Craftsman's Fair is an opportunity for junior high and high school students to display their work in such areas as drafting, woodworking, automotive, and metal, said Loren Martin, the publicity chair for "The students come mostly from Utah, but we have some participants from Wyoming and Nevada as well,"

Martin estimated that woodworking will be the largest division, followed by drafting.

"If you have never been to the fair, you will be very impressed with the displays," Martin said.

The exhibit included bedroom and living room furniture and drafting that is remarkable for junior high and high school students. He estimated that the projects displayed have taken the participants somewhere between 600 and 700 hours to complete.

All first place winners received ribbons and an opportunity for scholarships to BYU. The Young Craftsman's Fair also included live contests for students in the William H. Snell Building and the Roland A. Crabtree Technology Building.

Students find information easily on HBLL's BYLINE

Editor's Note: This is the first article in a three-part series on the resources available in the HBLL.

> By CARMEN DURLAND Universe Staff Writer

With Winter Semester finals behind them, some students breathe a sigh of relief and resolve to do better'on upcoming papers and tests.

Knowledge of the Harold B. Lee Library's computer resources can increase students' abilities to access information for such upcoming

Some of the library's resources are BYLINE (Brigham Young Libraries Information Network), Full Text, the World Wide Web, LAN (Local Area Network) and on-line catalogs of other libraries.

All of these resources are available through Gateway except LAN, which is accessed from separate computers. The BYLINE system is the same on-line catalog as the NOTIS computer system. NOTIS was renamed BYLINE for BYU in 1984 by a public contest for a title, said Paul Jordan. university librarian for technical ser-

NOTIS stands for Northwestern Online Technical Information System and was first developed and used at Northwestern University in Evanston, Northwestern marketed NOTIS and sold it to Ameritech Library Services, said Bill Lund, department chair of library information systems.

BYLINE, or NOTIS, runs on a mainframe computer in the James E. Talmage Building.

The mainframe stores the data that you are searching for and is called up onto the library's computer screen in the format in which you see it, Jordan

The computer workstations in the HBLL are acting as "dumb terminals." This means the information you search for is not on the hard drive on each computer in the library, he said.

By connecting Gateway, one accesses information stored on the mainframe in the and around the world.

On a majority of the workstations, the information cannot be downloaded because it is only an image on the computer screen, he

However, another option in Gateway is Full Text. Though presently limited in its capabilities, students can call up the full text of documents onto their terminal's screen and print it in the HBLL Copy Center for 15 cents per page. Any document abstract with "REQ DOC" at the bottom of the computer screen is available in full

The full text of 900 journals in the ABI Inform Business Index and UMI General Periodicals Index dating from the mid-1980s is available, Jordan

Students can also obtain the full text of publications by searching the World Wide Web on one of four computers by several reference desks in the HBLL. One computer is on the third floor, two are on the second floor and one is on the first floor, said Haybron Adams, reference librarian.

Gateway and BYLINE Next Generation, for people accessing BYLINE off-campus on the World Wide Web through file transfer protocol, are on these computers.

BYLINE Next Generation is a World Wide Web interface to bibliographic databases, such as BYLINE, that uses Netscape to search, Lund

Information from the Web can be printed without charge on the printers next to the computers, Adams said. Gateway provides students access to other databases such as LAN LAN "gives access to additional computerized periodical indexes and databases, including science, psychology, religion, history, sociology, education, social sciences, humanities, statistics, Utah library's holding, a national telephone directory and others," according to the "Welcome to the Harold B. Lee Library" booklet, available in the library.

"It is set up so that most of the material on there is full text and can only be downloaded (onto a disk, although) it depends on which database you are searching," Adams said.

LAN's telephone directory contains all listed phone numbers and addresses in the United States and Canada. There is another directory for toll-free numbers, he said.

Students can also access the catalogs of libraries in other states and countries, such as the Library of Congress, Utah State University, University of Utah, Arizona State University, Yale, Harvard, Michigan University and several colleges in California, by choosing the option under the Gateway menu.

Three women tracksters improve qualifying times

By ASHLEE CLEGG Universe Sports Writer

Three women BYU distance runners increased their chances of running in the NCAA Championships by improving their qualifying times at the Stanford Invitational Saturday.

Cougar distance coach Patrick Shane added the extra Stanford meet to increase the qualifying times of the distance runners. Ashloy Monahan, Maggie Chan, and Janeth Caizalitin Alder delivered high provisional times, almost assuring themselves slots in the upcoming NCAA Championships.

Monahan and Chan made the biggest improvements in the 1500 meter. Monahan jumped from a previous-best of 4:24.10, a low provisional mark, to a time of 4:21.36, while Chan shaved over three seconds off her best time of 4:25.46 to improve to 4:21.77.

Of the five provisional slots available in the 1500m, BYU is likely to grab at least three. The automatic NCAA standard is 4:19.50, while the provisional standard is 4:26.00.

'We're the only team in the country that has five athletes with qualifying marks in one event (the 1500)," Shane said. "That's quite an accomplish-

In addition to Monahan and Chan, three other runners have reached qualifying times in the 1500m. Melissa Teemant's best time in the 1500m is 4:24.25. Courtney Pugmire, the Cougars' freshman sensation has a best time of 4:23.32. Both are in the middle of the provisional times and may or may not be good enough to make nationals.

Alder, BYU's final provisional qualifier in the 1500, holds the best time in the WAC with a 4:21.18. Her time, which makes her a veritable shoe-in to compete at nationals, prompted coach Shane to enter the her in the 3000m. The All-America Alder showed her colors by winning the race, her first outdoor 3000 this year, with a high provisional time of 9:25.80, which should be good enough for her to reach the NCAA Alder also has an automatic qualifying time in the 5000m. Shane is unsure which events Alder will enter in Oregon.

Alder was named WAC athlete of the week two weeks ago.

The strong distance runners have helped BYU's women's track and field team remain solidly in the Top 15 of the U.S. Track Coaches Association Top 25 poll. They are currently ranked 11th.

The rest of the Cougars took the weekend off to prepare for the WAC Championships May 15-18. This will be the final chance to reach or improve qualifying times.

boundaries have been the problem we've encountered other elementary schools) want their children to go to Centennial. Some have even threatened a lawsuit," Bayles said.

Parents of students from Canyon Crest Elementary School have threatened the school district with a lawsuit.

"Some Canyon Crest parents are upset because their students will be bused past Centennial to Farrer. I understand why they think this is illogical, but it had to be done," Bayles said.

According to the boundary proposal submitted by the committee, only four elementary schools could go to the new middle school. Of the five nearest the middle school, the committee had to choose one to remain at Farrer. "Any of the schools would have to be bused past Centennial to Farrer," Bayles said the district has tried to accommodate those parents who want their children at Centennial.

"Because of Utah's School Choice with the school. Many parents (from law, parents (who do not live in the boundaries) can submit applications. We had 180 applications from parents and we accepted 95 of them," Bayles said. The district accepted 69 of the applications from Canyon Crest par-

"In many respects, the kids have been forgotten in this. Parents are so adamant to get their kids in the new school, they don't realize their children don't want to be at Centennial. Kids just want to be with their friends," Bayles said.

Bayles said these parents are good people who care about kids. "They have just overlooked what is in the kids' best interest," he said.

Bayles said Centennial's goal is to provide a quality education for kids and to be a united family. The staff consists of a combination of teachers from Dixon, Farrer and new staff hired by the district. Teachers can set up their classrooms July 1. Centennial Middle School will officially open

'Learn not to burn' may save kids' lives

By ESTHER COVINGTON Universe Staff Writer

Provo school children will soon be escaping from a simulated smoking building with help from the Provo City Fire Department.

The Provo City Fire Department announced its new fire safety education program, Learn Not To Burn, Wednesday morning at the Provo City

This program, obtained with grant money, is designed to teach children fire and life safety habits and attitudes, said Provo Fire Fighter and Paramedic Lynn Schofield.

"The Learn Not To Burn program teaches the 'Stop, Drop, and Roll' technique along with the importance of smoke detectors, fire drills, and the dangers of fire," Schofield said.

In addition to educating children about fire safety, the Provo City Fire Department has purchased a fire safety house trailer. This trailer is a 32foot mobile classroom designed to teach children fire safety with handson experience in practicing what they

"The fire safety house is equipped with a door that heats up, smoke detectors, a 911 telephone system, and a smoke machine.

"We want to make the experience as real as possible, so we provide real amenities, such as the smoke and a heating door. This is good training for a real fire," said Assistant Fire Chief Mike Bledsoe.

Carol R. Gross, fire safety education representative for the National Fire Protection Association, said Provo is one of 70 cities in North America to receive funding for the program and

"Provo was selected because of the good education system and the support from city officials, the fire department and local businesses,"

Provo Mayor George Stewart and five area business representatives were on hand to receive awards from the fire department for their contribution to the program.

The program will be taken to area schools beginning in September. Three schools, Provost Elementary, TLC for Kids Day care, and the BYU Preschool, have been chosen as the pilots of the program. Provo fire fighters and the children's teachers will teach the program. The children will be entertained by Hook and Ladder, Provo Fire Department's fire safety clowns. In addition, the children will watch educational videos and each child will get to experience the fire safety house trailer.

The Learn Not To Burn program is designed for pre-school through third grade children.

"Our goal is to increase knowledge of fire safety in the hopes it will prevent fires. If this program saves even one life, we will know it was successful," Bledsoe said.

Elder F. Enzio Busche

Member of the First Quorum of the Seventy

In 1956, one year after marriage to his lifelong sweetheart, Jutta Baum, Elder and Sister Busche were introduced to the gospel through missionaries. They were baptized in 1958, after which Elder Busche began what has now been 40 years of Church service, including branch secretary, elders quorum president, branch president, district president, and mission president. He was the first non-English-speaking regional representative of the Church and has been a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy since 1977. He has served as president of the Germany Munich Mission, as area president of the North America Northeast and Utah North Areas, as president of the Frankfurt Temple, as a member of the North America Southwest Area Presidency, and as an assistant director of the Temple Department.

At the age of 14 he was drafted into the German army in the last year of the war. When the war ended, he was in an American prison camp. He finished his schooling in economics and management at Bonn and Frieberg Universities and worked for 22 years in the printing industry, developing his company into one of the largest printing and publishing companies in Germany.

An avid outdoorsman, he has promoted group health jogging and other fitness activities. Elder and Sister Busche are the parents of four children, and they have 11 grandchildren.

Cellular industry combats fraud with new technology over 28,000 new cellular phone customers a day, the industry is also facing the tremendous threat of cellular phone fraud. Over the last two years approximately 10 million customers have joined the wireless communications super highway, bringing the total number of cellular subscribers above 25 million. Cellular fraud, however, is growing with the industry. An estimated $1.6 million is lost each day to fraudulent activities.

Tom McClure, director of fraud management of the Cellular Telecommunications Industry Association (CTIA), said, "Fraud represents 4 percent of our gross revenues in the industry. The rule of thumb is that you should operate your business at 2 percent, and we have doubled that.'

The most popular form of cellular fraud is known as "cloning."

Each cellular phone has a unique electronic serial number (ESN) and mobile identification number (MIN). When cloning occurs, both numbers are stolen from a legitimate customer. Through the use of sophisticated monitoring devices, criminals steal ESN/MIN pairs and reprogram them into other phones to be sold on the black market. All calls made from the original customers.

General Assembly in January, McClure said, "The predators of stolen wireless air time are not just a scourge on the wireless industry but society as a whole. These criminals use this stolen air time to provide them with anonymity and the ability to conduct their criminal enterprises."

Roseanna DeMaria, vice president of business security of AT&T Wireless Services, said, "Cellular fraud is a challenge to the industry. There will always be criminals looking for illicit devices to steal our ser-

The industry is fighting back through education, tougher legal recourse and new technology. Through CTIA, cellular carriers are working together to identify and prosecute criminals.

"We recognize fraud as a very serious problem. We can no longer treat it as a deterrent to cloning as a non-issue," McClure said.

The leading weapon in fighting one phone from another by the way it the emergence of cloning fraud, the industry was faced with "tumbling experiencing tremendous growth with nals would change ESN numbers after each call. By tumbling' ESN numbers, criminals could avoid system shut down procedures.

Thoreen, Jim director of revenue assurance for 360 Degrees Communications said, "The one thing that helped the most in fighting cellular fraud was the introduction of

'pre-call validation.' Pre-call validation reversed the validation process. This feature prevented customers from making a call on a wireless phone until the new ESN/MIN pair was validated. "Pre-call validation makes it a lot easier for us to see what is going on with our numbers and when they are being used. Even though we can't use that to stop cloning, it is probably the biggest advancement in fighting fraud," Thoreen said.

Professionals in the industry agree that technology is a good answer for the elimination of cloning. "Cloning fraud can be eliminated.

Can it be eliminated overnight? Absolutely not," DeMaria said. While there is no cure-all technology, the industry is developing technology to assist its efforts in battling

The industry is testing and developing "authentication." With authentication the cellular system will run illegal phones are then billed to the through a series of codes — a checks and balances system — to validate In an address to the Maryland customers. Authentication will eliminate home cloning fraud (fraud that occurs within a carrier's market) and roam cloning fraud (fraud that occurs when a criminal steals an ESN/MIN pair from one carrier and uses it in the market of another carrier).

"Authentication will render the cloned phone a dinosaur," DeMaria

Another recent technological development made to fight home cloning fraud is "RF fingerprinting." RF fingerprinting technology has been designed to identify the unique signal frequency pattern or "radio fingerprint" that each cellular phone emits. No two radio fingerprints are the same so an illegal phone would automatically be denied service.

Dave Daniels, director of corporate fraud management of AirTouch Cellular, supports RF fingerprinting

"You can distinguish or differentiate fraud is innovative technology. Before transmits. It has to do specifically with the uniqueness of each device. It's the equivalent of a fingerprint or a voice print," he said.

Melba Martin, manager of fraud prevention and control of BellSouth Cellular Corporation, said,

"The bad guys are going to find ways to compromise our systems and technology. They are getting smarter and learning more about what we're doing. Our biggest fear is that they will completely compromise the technology that we have spent millions of dollars developing to prevent fraud."

A large part of fraud prevention involves the ability to outmaneuver the criminal.

"In the technological arena, where you really begin to play chess with the criminal, you have to be able to anticipate where he is going so that you can cut him off at the pass," DeMaria said.

Currently, cellular fraud is a federal crime. However, the industry is actively lobbying states to make cellular fraud a felony under state law. The statute has been passed in Florida and

As cloning fraud is brought under control, the industry will begin to see a new type of fraudulent activity.

"I think there will always be crime. Criminals exist for one reason — to cheat the system. They're flexible and they evolve much like roaches. When we use a stronger insecticide, they evolve into a stronger breed,"

Human Race raises funds for charity

By MIKE BRUNT Universe Staff Writer

Saturday morning hundreds of community members met on Novell's Orem campus to walk, jog, run and skate for charities of their choice. The event was called The Human Race, and it was the first charity run of its kind in Utah

"The Human Race is a unique event because the participants choose which charity will receive the money they raise," said Mollianne Buhn of the United Way Volunteer Center. Although the name of the event is The Human Race, Buhn said it's not really a race.

"People who took part walked, jogged, ran, Rollerbladed and wheelchaired the five kilometers, and there was no special recognition for first place. The main point of the event was to raise funds for charities in need," Buhn said.

Participants each raised their own donations by seeking both private and public sponsors. The amount of money gathered by the participants ranged from $5 to $1,600 Buhn said. Many of the pledges were between $20 and $100.

Novell, NuSkin International, The Daily Herald, and the United Way Volunteer Center were the main sponsors of The Human Race.

These organizations covered all of the costs of the event, so every cent pation in the coming years.
